

In the Italian quarry, in Seravezza, Tuscany, within an area known as Trambiserra, "open-air" cultivation is used, where planning and technology are currently enabling the realization of rough blocks, improving the production of such blocks in quantity as well as in quality.